

The Mbaéré-Bodingué National Park is a National Park located in the south west of the Central African Republic. It covers 866 km².^[1] The Park is located between the Mbaéré and Bodingué rivers.

Contents

1 History

2 Flora and fauna

3 Population

4 References

5 External links

History[edit]

The Park was established in 2007 by the Ministry of Water, Forests, Hunting and Fishing and the discontinued Forest Ecosystems in Central Africa (ECOFAC).

Flora and fauna[edit]

The Park includes savannah, lowland floodplain forest and rainforest. The area is a biotope for elephants, gorillas, buffalos, chimpanzees, hippos and more than 400 different species of birds.

Population[edit]

Beside the animals there are also different ethnic groups of humans that are located in the area and are losing their livelihood as they do hunting and fishing.