Goz Beïda National Park is a national park in Chad and covers an area of 3000 km2.[1] It is located near the town of the same name in the province of Sila. The area has been hit by internal conflicts in the country, but it has also remained a haven for many endangered plant and animal species.[2]